

Lab 2.2: Advanced Response Builder

Hands-on Lab | Module 2, Lesson 2 | Company: SkillBoost Corporate Training

Introduction

Building on the AER framework from the previous lab, you now tackle two of the toughest objections. A SkillBoost prospect has said the program is “too expensive compared to online courses,” and another has said, “We use LinkedIn Learning.” In this lab, you will document tested responses to a price objection and a competitive objection, applying value-reframing and graceful positioning.

Learning Objectives

After completing this lab, you will be able to:

- Reframe a price objection around value and return rather than cost.
- Position against a competitor gracefully and without disparagement.
- Document tested responses for price and competitive objections.

Tools and Resources Required

Quantifying Objection Handling Success (downloadable resource).

Objection Categories Reference Sheet and Response Flashcards (downloadable resource).

The reading: Advanced Objection Techniques.

Instructions

- 1 Write a response to the price objection “Too expensive compared to online courses,” using value stacking and the cost of inaction.
- 2 Write a response to the competitive objection “We use LinkedIn Learning,” using graceful positioning and a clear differentiator. Do not disparage the competitor.
- 3 Review each response and confirm it reframes the conversation toward value rather than price or feature comparison.

Expected Output

- A written response to the price objection.
- A written response to the competitive objection.

Summary

In this lab, you built tested responses to a price objection and a competitive objection, reframing each toward the value the customer gains. Handling these advanced objections with confidence protects both your margin and your credibility.
