

Lab 3.3: Expansion Conversation Practice

Hands-on Lab | Module 3, Lesson 3 |
Company: SkillBoost Corporate
Training

Introduction

With your bundle and business case built, you now practice the conversation that closes an expansion. Two common expansion objections have come up with a SkillBoost client: “One department at a time” and “Let us see results first.” In this lab, you will respond to both using the Acknowledge-Explore-Respond framework.

Learning Objectives

By the end of this lab, you will be able to:

- Apply the Acknowledge-Explore-Respond framework to expansion objections.
- Write responses that lower the perceived risk of expanding.
- Maintain the value of the offer while addressing resistance.

Tools and Resources Required

Expansion Objection Response Guide (downloadable resource).

The reading: Expansion Conversation Playbook.

Instructions

- 1 Write an AER response to the objection “We would rather expand one department at a time.”
- 2 Write an AER response to the objection “We would like to see results first.”
- 3 Confirm that each response acknowledges the concern, explores it, and offers a path that lowers risk without discounting the value.

Expected Output

A written AER response to the “one department at a time” objection.

A written AER response to the “see results first” objection.

Summary

In this lab, you applied the AER framework to two expansion-specific objections, offering phased, low-risk paths that keep the value intact.

Handling expansion objections this way turns hesitation into a confident next step for the customer.
