

Lab 2.2: Develop a Tiered Territory Plan and Weekly Schedule

Introduction

In this lab, you will practice territory prioritization and time allocation: two foundational skills for effective sales execution. Not all accounts deserve equal effort, and strong planning protects high-value opportunities while ensuring lower-priority accounts still receive appropriate attention.

You will segment accounts into meaningful priority tiers and translate those tiers into a realistic weekly prospecting schedule. This exercise reinforces that strategic time allocation is as important as prospecting activity itself.

Learning Objectives

By the end of this lab, you will be able to:

- Categorize accounts using tiered prioritization criteria.
- Organize accounts into A, B, and C tiers.
- Allocate prospecting time across account tiers.
- Develop a weekly schedule aligned with priorities.
- Apply territory planning principles to focus on sales efforts.

Scenario

Company Name: ProClean Commercial Services

Industry: Commercial office cleaning and janitorial services

Territory: Downtown business district

Account Types in Territory:

- Professional services firms (law, consulting, accounting)

- Medical offices and healthcare facilities

- Financial companies (wealth management, regional banks)

- Mix of high-density office buildings and boutique locations

Your Role

Because time and attention are limited, ProClean must prioritize accounts strategically rather than treating every prospect equally. Your goal is to create a tiered approach that focuses on effort where it matters most.

Tools/Downloadable Resources

Downloadable Resource: Lab 2.2 Exemplar Solution

Use this as a reference for structure and approach, not as the "correct" tiering. Different criteria and priorities can lead to different but equally valid tiering decisions.

Downloadable Resource: Weekly Activity Planner

This is the required planning instrument for Exercise 2. You will use its weekly time-block structure to allocate prospecting effort across your account tiers and record your protected prospecting blocks.

Downloadable Resource: Weekly Activity Planner: How to Use

Read this companion guide before building your schedule. It explains how to prioritize activities by level, protect high-value prospecting time, and plan realistically around meetings and administrative work.

Sample Account List

You will work with the following 12 accounts in this exercise:

Account Name	Type	Size	Key Context
Riverside Medical Group	Healthcare	85 employees	3 locations, compliance-focused
Summit Wealth Advisors	Financial Services	45 employees	Expanding to 2nd floor
Parker and Associates Law	Professional Services	120 employees	Full-building tenant
Downtown Dental Clinic	Healthcare	12 employees	Single suite

Account Name	Type	Size	Key Context
TechCore Consulting	Professional Services	65 employees	Recently hired Ops Manager
Metro Regional Bank	Financial Services	200 employees	Branch + corporate office
Green Valley Accounting	Professional Services	30 employees	Stable, no growth signals
HealthFirst Urgent Care	Healthcare	55 employees	High foot traffic, strict sanitation

Account Name	Type	Size	Key Context
Apex Investment Group	Financial Services	90 employees	Lease renewed, 5-year commitment
Cornerstone Insurance	Professional Services	22 employees	Small office, low turnover
City Dermatology	Healthcare	40 employees	Adding 3rd provider next quarter
Legacy Trust Company	Financial Services	150 employees	Recent compliance audit

Activity Steps

Exercise 1: Tier Your Territory

Step 1: Review Tiering Criteria

Before assigning tiers, understand what each tier represents:

A-Tier Accounts:

- High strategic value

- Strong fit with ProClean's services (office-based, compliance needs)

- Larger office footprint or multiple locations

- Likely to support recurring or expanded services

Growth signals or operational changes

B-Tier Accounts:

Moderate fit or size

Potential for growth over time

Worth consistent but less frequent outreach

Solid mid-market opportunities

C-Tier Accounts:

- Smaller offices or lower urgency
- Limited short-term revenue potential
- Best served through light-touch or automated outreach
- Still valuable, but lower priority given time constraints

Step 2: Assign Each Account to a Tier

Review the sample account list provided earlier. For each account, decide whether it belongs in A, B, or C tier based on the criteria above.

There is no single "correct" answer. What matters is that your tiering reflects intentional criteria, not guesswork.

Step 3: Document Your Tiering Decisions

Create a simple table that includes:

- Account name

- Tier (A / B / C)

- One-sentence justification for the tier assignment

Exercise 2: Build a Weekly Prospecting Schedule

Step 1: Design Your Weekly Time Blocks

Create a high-level weekly schedule that shows how you would allocate time across account tiers.

Your schedule should:

- Prioritize A-tier accounts during your highest-energy hours (often mornings)

- Include consistent and protected prospecting blocks

- Show which tiers are targeted in each prospecting block

Reflect realistic time constraints, not an idealized week

You do not need to schedule every minute; focus on blocks of effort, not precision.

Step 2: Verify Time Allocation Aligns with Tiers

Review your schedule and ask:

Do A-tier accounts get the most time and best time slots?

Are B-tier accounts receiving consistent but moderate attention?

Are C-tier accounts handled efficiently without consuming prime prospecting hours?

Success Criteria

A strong submission will:

- Assign tiers based on clear and defensible criteria (size, fit, growth signals, or compliance needs).
- Include justifications that reference specific account characteristics.
- Show clear time allocation differences between A, B, and C tiers.
- Protect peak energy hours (mornings) for A-tier prospecting.
- Maintain consistency across the week (not all A-tier on Monday).

Demonstrate realistic planning that acknowledges meetings, admin work, and other constraints.

Self-Assessment Checklist

By the end of this lab, you should have:

A tiering table with all 12 accounts assigned to A, B, or C tiers.

One sentence justification for each tiering decision.

A weekly prospecting schedule showing time blocks and tier focus.

Clear alignment between tiers and time allocation (A-tier gets prime hours).

Summary

Congratulations! You have completed this lab. In this activity, you categorized accounts into priority tiers, justified your tiering decisions using account characteristics and business signals, and developed a weekly prospecting schedule aligned with territory priorities. You also practiced allocating time strategically, protecting high-value prospecting activities, and maintaining consistent account coverage. These territory planning skills help sales professionals manage their time effectively and focus effort where it can generate the greatest results.
